Our next meeting is Thursday, May 4th at 5:30 in the Community Room.

TIPS FROM PENN STATE MASTER GARDENERS

HELLO BEECH MOUNTAIN GARDENERS!

Last Month I wrote that we might have an early spring. Then we got more snow than we had previously this year. And we also had some near record high temperatures. So much for trying to predict.

SOME GARDENING MYTHS

The Garden Professors are a group of extension agents and other scientifically minded gardeners who research and write about gardening, specifically, what is true and what is myth.

One author quotes Will Rogers to explain their purpose: "It's not what we don't know that causes us trouble, it's what we know that ain't so."

Most of us have been unwitting victims of garden advice that was given to us with an authoritative tone of voice but without any scientific confirmation. Then, it is accepted as fact and repeated. This month the Garden Professors check out a few garden myths for us.

DIY GARDEN REMEDIES

Self-proclaimed gardening experts come up with all kinds of home-made potions as safer alternatives to conventional fertilizers or pesticides. There are good reasons that both fertilizers and pesticides are regulated at state and/or national levels: it's the only way you can know exactly what the active ingredients are and when, where, and how to apply these chemicals. To follow some "chemical free" recipe from the internet is playing Russian roulette in terms of collateral damage to soils and non-target organisms.

EPSOM SALTS:

Epsom salts are magnesium sulfate and gardeners swear by them for improving seed germination and overall plant health.

The studies that have been done on Epsom salts that show success have been conducted on intensively produced crops that were actually deficient in magnesium. Magnesium deficiency can occur when excess water from rain or irrigation leach nutrients out.

Excess magnesium can cause root disease, contaminate the soil and injure plants. If you think your soil is deficient have it tested.

WOUND DRESSINGS

Unfortunately, many gardeners don't understand that plants and people respond differently to injury. While antibiotic dressing and bandages are good for healing our nicks and cuts, trees have a completely different response. Slathering black goo or paint over tree wounds is the last thing trees need to seal damage naturally. Yes trees can heal wounds without human assistance.

WEED BLOCKING FABRIC

Weed blocking fabric actually provides a great substrate for weed seeds to take hold. In addition, "all those pores in the fabric that supposedly allow water and oxygen to move through are soon filled with bits of soil." Remove the weed cloth and replace it with arborist wood chips.

PLASTIC MULCH.

There is nothing worse you can put on a living soil unless your intention is to kill everything under it. You may see it used in agricultural production, but that doesn't make it a good choice for your gardens and landscapes. Again, arborist wood chips are a much better alternative.

MULCH

As mentioned above one of the best mulches is arborist wood chips. That is the chips produced when a tree is cut down and branches ground up. These are frequently available when a neighbor or friend has a tree removed. They should be applied to a depth of no more than 3 inches and be kept back from the trunk of any tree or shrub being mulched.

IMPORTANT WARNING

Gardeners and residents need to be reminded that we are once again in tick season. Lyme disease is a serious infection and is epidemic in the northeast. Ticks that carry the bacteria have been found in our area. All area residents should be informed about the cause, symptoms and treatments for Lyme disease as well as ways to avoid tick borne infections. For important information visit Penn State's tick information web site at
