TIPS FROM PENN STATE MASTER GARDENERS

HELLO BEECH MOUNTAIN GARDENERS!

Spring is just around the corner! However I am writing this at the end of April. We have experienced record high and low temperatures, heavy snow, rain, freezing rain, and graupel. If you don't know what graupel is, Google it. All those robins hopping about in my yard are looking very confused. Hopefully May will be better.

THE SYMBOLIC SUNFLOWER

Currently a symbol of support for Ukraine, many gardeners may consider adding sunflowers to their garden this year. Explore the sunflower's fascinating history and tips for growing your own.

- Today Ukraine and the Russian Federation are by far the largest producers of sunflower oil. Stastica.com reports Ukraine as the 2021/2022 world leader in the production of sunflower seeds at 17.5 million metric tons.
- Sunflowers originated in the New World, first cultivated by Native Americans in the area that is now New Mexico and Arizona.
- Spanish explorers introduced sunflowers to Europe around 1500 AD.
- Sunflower oil gained popularity in Ukraine and Russia in the mid-1700s when the Russian Orthodox Church banned lard, butter, and olive oil during Lent.

DO SUNFLOWERS FOLLOW THE SUN?

YES and (then) no. Young sunflowers face east in the morning, move their heads westward during the day before turning to face east again overnight. This movement, called heliotropism, is actually a result of the stems elongating on different sides at different times of day. But when the sunflower matures the stem stiffens, and the flowers will continually face east. The sunflower's main goal is to perpetuate itself by producing seeds; facing east provides optimal warming of the flower head, which makes it more attractive to pollinators.

IT'S EASY TO GROW YOUR OWN

Sunflowers are an annual, best grown from seed planted outdoors after all danger of frost is past. They grow so quickly that there is little reason to start sunflowers indoors. Choose an area with well-drained soil and full sun—at least six hours per day. Spacing is determined by the type of sunflower, so follow the planting guidelines on the seed packet. Choose a spot that is sheltered from wind. Even if they are grown in a sheltered location, you may have to stake very tall cultivars, especially as the heavy flower heads form. Supplemental water may be needed, especially around bloom time.

SUNFLOWER CULTIVARS

Visit any seed company website, garden center, or flip through a seed catalog and you will see an amazing array of sunflower cultivars. (Note: keep your eyes open for sunflower seed purveyors who are donating part of the proceeds to aiding Ukrainian refugees.) Here are categories of sunflower cultivars to consider.

TALL

These varieties are usually described as growing to at least 6 feet, sometimes double that height! They are usually the best for harvesting seed, although birds will try to beat you to them. Tall cultivars include: 'Mammoth', 'Mongolian Giant', 'Black Oil Hybrid'.

BRANCHING

These cultivars have many flowers on short branches that are still long enough to cut for bouquets. Pinching off new growth close to a leaf node will encourage their tendency to branch. Some of these varieties are bred to have little or no pollen, a plus when they are placed indoors in a vase. For your sunflowers to benefit the environment, look for cultivars that do bear pollen. Branching sunflowers with pollen include 'Firecracker', 'Autumn Beauty', and 'Valentine'.

UNUSUAL COLORS/FORMS

The classic sunflower has yellow petals surrounding a dark brown disc. Yet cultivars are available in various shades ranging from cream to mahogany, for example: 'Chianti' (dark red), 'Soraya' (orange), 'Ring of Fire' (bicolored petals). The popular 'Teddy Bear' sunflower looks like a shaggy yellow pompom-on-a-stick; though a novel form, it is not beneficial to pollinators.

DWARF

Sunflowers are even hybridized to grow well in small spaces and containers! Look for 'Dwarf Sunspot', 'Elves Blend', 'Junior', or 'Sunray Yellow'.
